California Pathways into Public Health Initiative

Deadline to apply is Sun, October 20

For those from historically underrepresented and varied backgrounds interested in a career in public health, the paid 13-month Pathways Fellowship is a training program. Working in a variety of roles where they will enhance their public health skills and provide culturally competent services to the local community, Pathways Fellows will work at California local health department hosts. Foundational training will be offered with an eye toward the entry-level competencies required of California's public health workforce. Professional development and lifelong learning will carry on right through the program's end.
